The effect of mitomycin C (MMC) on basement membrane thickness and epithelial wound healing was studied in rabbits. MMC was applied to the corneal surface for 5 seconds in concentrations ranging from 0.00001 to 0.1%.

The major effect of MMC was on epithelial wound healing. Basement membrane thickness was reduced significantly in the stroma 5 minutes after treatment with 0.001% MMC. Basement membrane thickness returned to normal in the unwounded eye after 3 hours. Slit-lamp examination of the corneas showed that there was very little effect of MMC on the corneal stroma. No effect on endothelial cell size was found.Q: Subset of a table showing frequency between categories I need to create a table with a subsets of a larger one, but I have no idea on how to do it. How can I fix this? A: I guess you have changed the Site Address. The browser should have saved the change. If it does not exist in the browser, try to clear the browser cache. You can test by putting the site in a test folder and visiting the site. Indicadores Links relacionados

Compartir BRCA-related breast and ovarian cancers in Latin American families Background: The primary genetic cause of breast and ovarian cancer is the oncogene BRCA1. Studies of BRCA1 mutation frequency and the population-based nature of the inheritance are essential to understand the onset and progression of these diseases. To facilitate the study of BRCA1, the population-based, Mendelian-based inheritance that characterizes dominantly inherited diseases is reviewed.

Methods: BRCA1 mutation frequency was estimated from studies in populations at high risk of breast and ovarian cancer who had been screened for mutations in this gene. Information on BRCA1 hereditary variants and their associated phenotypes is also presented for cancer patients and their relatives.

Results: High BRCA1 mutation frequency was observed in Latin American populations, ranging from 0.3% to 4%. However, in some populations, no mutations were observed. Conversely, some prevalent mutations were not found. One variant, Q1061X, which reduces BRCA1 protein function, was suggested to be a founder mutation. BRCA1 founder mutations have been identified in Latin American populations, mainly in Colombia. Con
