Download this software from adobe.com: activation of peroxisome proliferator-activated receptor gamma ameliorates diabetic nephropathy independent of expression of angiotensin II type 1 receptor or adrenergic beta(2) receptor. Infiltration of activated macrophages and proinflammatory cytokines is an important characteristic of diabetic nephropathy. The prevalence of diabetic nephropathy is high in patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus, and the activation of peroxisome proliferator-activated receptor gamma (PPARgamma) has potential effects on inflammation. This study was designed to determine whether macrophage infiltration and expression of inflammatory genes in the kidney are attenuated by activation of PPARgamma using the synthetic ligand rosiglitazone. Diabetes mellitus was induced by streptozotocin injection in the rat. Rosiglitazone was administered for 3 weeks and blood glucose and urine protein excretions were measured. The expressions of PPARgamma and genes related to inflammation (iNOS, TNF-alpha, IL-1beta, and ICAM-1) were examined by immunohistochemical staining, western blotting, and real-time reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction

Analysis of oxidized lipids in the plantar foot. Oxidative stress is known to play a role in the pathogenesis of a variety of inflammatory diseases including diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis and atherosclerosis. Recent studies have also shown that plantar soft tissue contains a number of oxidized lipid metabolites. In the present study, the hypothesis was tested that oxidative damage is increased in the plantar soft tissue of diabetic subjects. In this study, twenty subjects with diabetes and eleven healthy controls were recruited. The presence of the oxidized lipid species 10-hydroxy-hexadecanoic acid (10-HHA) and 5-oxo-palmitic acid (5-OPA) in the plantar soft tissue was investigated using tandem mass spectrometry (MS/MS). The levels of 10-HHA and 5-OPA were higher in the plantar skin of diabetic subjects compared to healthy controls. Furthermore, the presence of these metabolites in the plantar skin correlated significantly with markers of diabetes such as HbA1C and creatinine. The data presented in this study suggest that there is increased oxidative stress in the plantar foot of diabetic subjects. This may be a key mechanism in the development of foot complications such as ulceration. Career Career highlights World records Most
