developed. the pu film is prepared by an in-situ polymerization technique to obtain a very high porosity in order to allow tissue ingrowth and cell attachment and proliferation. in vitro results showed good tissue-scaffold interaction, viability and cell proliferation of the biodegradable pu scaffold. the insertion of the valve within the right ventricle of the animal was successful. due to the highly hydrophilic surface of the pu, a chemical compound was used to enhance the hydrophilicity of the pu film and to promote cell adhesion. when implanted in vivo, the hydrophilic compounds eliminated the cell migration due to the high initial hydrophobicity of the pu film. in vivo characterization of the device was performed by different echocardiographic methods after 1, 2, 4, 8 and 12 weeks.
